

What is down?

Down consists of clusters of 3 dimensional filaments growing from a quill point without a quill shaft. It looks much like a ripe dandelion pod. Down is the light, fluffy undercoating waterfowl have to keep warm.

What is feather?

Feathers, the principle covering of birds, have a flat construction. It has a tubular quill shaft from one end to the other, with a series of fibers joining together into a flat structure on each side of the shaft.

What is the difference?

Down is not a young or small feather and it will never develop into one. A down cluster has a quill point, but no quill shaft, so it is far more resilient than feather. In spite of being lighter than a feather, it is three-dimensional rather than two, therefore down has more loft or filling power. Down is grown for warmth. Feathers are flat and two dimensional, and are grown for flying, while smaller feathers are for protection. We use smaller feathers for our pillows, which in turn provide a smaller, softer, more comfortable quill.

How can down be so light, yet insulate so well?

Down warms without weight. Because of its three dimensional structure and ability to "loft" each down cluster traps more air than its weight. Every ounce of quality down has about 2 million fluffy filaments that interlock and overlap to provide a protective layer of air that keeps warmth in and cold out. It is very resilient so you can scrunch it up or flatten it out, and then give it a good shake to fluff it back to the form that keeps you cozy and warm.

Why is most down imported?

The production of down and feather depends on the dietary habits of an area. North Americans are relatively small consumers of duck and geese, so they harvest a proportionately small amount of down. Over 70% of the worlds down are produced in the Orient. In many Asian countries, the consumption of beef is almost nonexistent, and ducks and geese provide a large portion of the meat supply.

Does climate affect the quality of down and feather?

Climate itself does not affect the quality of the product, but it does affect quantity. A bird in cold weather will grow more down to stay warm, but the quality depends simply on the maturity of the bird.

Does color have any relation to quality?

None at all. As stated previously, quality is determined mainly by the age of the bird. White down is sometimes preferred only because it can be put into light colored coverings without showing through.

How are down and feathers processed?

Down and feathers are carefully washed and sterilized with special processes, rinsed, dried, and then separated into different grades by blowing. The drafts from a machine send the best down to the highest bins and feathers into the lower bins as they are heavier. The entire process must be done properly, in order to permanently eliminate odors, and ensure permanent lofting of the down.

If down is so superior, why are so many synthetics being manufactured?

The main reason people purchase synthetic pillows is because they are the only true "hypo-allergenic" pillow, which is ideal for those with allergies. Synthetic pillows are also mildew resistant. A great plus is they are more affordable than down. Synthetic "down" is becoming increasingly popular. They say imitation is the sincerest form of flattery!

Custom Down Products

Our custom down products are available in a wide variety of shapes, sizes and fills. Any cushion can be custom made to your specific needs.

Down Envelopes

Down envelopes are advantageous because you can control the degree of firmness of your cushion by choosing the desired foam. We offer envelope back and seat cushions. Back cushions should use softer foam than seat cushions. Our envelopes have a zipper opening in the back to make foam installation easy. We can fill our envelopes with various down and feather blends or polyester.

Solid Down Cushions

Solid cushions give a soft feel, with an "overstuffed" less uniform shape. Our cushions are available in various down and feather blends and are covered in a down-proof 100% natural cotton ticking.

F-Dimension is front on seat cushions or top on back cushions. B-Dimensions are back or bottom.
